CRACKER MANUFACTURE.

Re Journey from Flour Barrel to Cracker Box Described in Detail. Step into one of Detroit's leading eracker manufactories, one using from 80 to 100 barrels of flour daily. Nothing but the very best brands of Michigan roller process flour are used; white wheat flour for color and red wheat ur for strength. Here are ten large troughs 20 feet long and of width and depth to hold the dough made from 10 to 12 barrels of flour. The troughs for a morning's baking are filled with flour, the yeast put in and set to sponge over night. The afternoon's baking is similarly treated at early morning. Here is a trough with a ton and a quarter of dough, and from 8 to 10 of them are filled daily. Higher and still higher rises the ambitious yeast, light as childhood's own heart and spongy as a free lunch fiend -only in a totally dif-

The critical time approaches. Two vigilant employes scoop a channel through the flour, leaving a thin dam at the end next the yeast. The short-ening, about two tierces to eighty barrels of flour, is put in and thoroughly mixed. A few moments' respite is utilized by the yeast to work itself into a fine frenzy. Just before its "mad ambition doth o'erleap itself," the bar-rier is broken away and the formy current fills the floury banks. The two gilantes, bared as to arms, go at it with a vim, mixing, kneading, tugging and lifting at the doughy mass. Three times must it thus be handled. a ton and a quarter to a ton and a half each time, and eight to ten such base-ball and a thousandfold more use

The kneaded dough, having reached the required lightness, is run through a mixer, a machine with an apparatus lke a gigantic corkscrew, revolving in a box. Thoroughly mixed, it is placed on large receiving trays, where it puffs tself up quite equal to Mrs. Parvenu n a four-story stone-front. Marvelous how light-hearted it keeps

We were talking with a farmer only the other day who was using a cutter which For right sere is a macaine caused a "break," having two rollers 20 inches long and 8 in diameter, and an appetite for dough that is never satisfied. The keeper of the jovial monster grasps a nice little biscuit of 75 to 190 pounds disposed of the hay as fast as three men could handle the material to the machine—about a ton every twenty minutes—about a two-borse tread power. It is not such a serious job weight and tosses it into the hopper. With a fierce growl of pleasure, the machine grasps its feed and deposits it in a neatly-folded blanket of dough on as some imagine to put hay through one of these machines, the principal items to be considered being the lathe table beneath.

With a deft motion the keeper flings

it in again and again until at the sixth inning it is called out by the umpire, a nice little blanket or "form," 6 to 8 feet long, 2 feet wide and 1 to 2 inches thick.

The form emerges from its ordeal a prose poem in dough. The attenuated form is passed over My labor was shorter and less pajn-

It is worth its to the tender mercies of the cutting machine, where sets of rollers hug it down until thin enough to be considered teautiful. Then a plunging apparatus stamps out the crackers. A little farther on a brush device decends and forces the three-cornered fragments and crumbs out on first base. This affects a great saving, and is one I the cutest things in the house.

Beside this machine is the oven Here stands an operative with a thin board about two feet by four, technically called a "peel," Working with all the automatic precision and regularity of a machine, he slips the peel under the oncoming stream of crackers,

CURIOUS LONDON CLUBS.

A short tour through the East End of London has convinced us that the clubs thereabouts are equally as singular as the curious contests held in that quarter.

One of the most amusing is The Judge and Jury. This is a society formed for the purpose of trying mock charges among its members, and is usually held in the parior of some con-venient public house once a week in the winter months, and at stated intervals at the present time. Stepney, Limehouse, Whitechapel, Spitalfields and other typical East End localities all have their Judge and Jury.

The "charges" are always of a most outrageous as well as humorous do-Many years ago bird fanciers' clubs were much in vogue, but there are very few in existence now. One of these was for the purpose of relieving a brother bird-catcher when in distress of a peculiar kind. The law only allows birds to be caught at certain times of the year, and representatives of the lime and doughs daily. There's a health lift for of senson were subject to severe pen twig found laving down their bait out nities.

> or six pence to the funds of the society was sufficient to secure a prompt payment of the penalty if caught thus infringing the law.

Another club, peculiar to the birdcatching fraternity, was once a rec-ognized institution, and we believe, although it is not conducted on such a large scale nowadays, that interested parties still meet and talk the matter over in a small way.

The members are known as The Canaries, and the latest idea or dodge discovered in transforming the humble sparrow into a more aristogratic bird changing its coat to another color was It was said, too, and on good authority, that these men were in the habit of further experimenting on the birds by piercing them with red hot cedles in order to make them sing tter, but one of the oldest dealers in Bird Fair assured the writer that this tter experiment had never been done o his knowledge.

You will find in the East End clubs for pickpockets and their brethren, clubs for beggars, who mass their takings in the way of victuals together and partake of a meal from the same dish; but one of the most curious is the Teapot Club.

This society is supported by the frequenters of cheap lodging houses, whose limited exchequer will allow them to occasionally partake of the ragrant cup. The teapot of the lodging-house parlor is the common property of the tenants, and in many of the houses a woman has it given into her charge, while those who wish for a mug of tea every evening can have the same guar-anteed on payment of from id to 1id With the subscriptions from the lodgers "siftings" at Is per pound, are purchased and browed accordingly. A club, too, exists in the East End only open to men who have met and cor tooms of onions, interspersed with loss improved her a bit, and when she large rosy winter apples (from the loss improved her a bit, and when she top of the barrel) hung from the dried out and set up a husky purriag of each ing.
